

you.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: No, it's my time, no, not on my time.

SENATOR DECAMP: Okay.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Senator DeCamp, has the argument been made, by those who favor repeal, that there are currently a number of operations right now in violation?

SENATOR DECAMP: Absolutely.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Now, if the Attorney General would find that some operations are in violation, and begin to enforce the law against those operations, do you think that determination and the consequent action by the Attorney General would affect people's opinion about the significance of Initiative 300?

SENATOR DECAMP: Absolutely it would because I think a number of people that may think they are supporting it are, in fact, in violation, from people with hogs, to people with cattle.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Okay, okay, okay. Now, the information on which that determination would be made, if I understand you correctly, came from the Secretary of State's Office and he has had it for some time. Is that correct? Have I correctly stated what you said, or have I misstated?

SENATOR DECAMP: I think the Secretary of State has had access to the information.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Has it been in his office, to your knowledge, the information that he is now turning over to the Attorney General?

SENATOR DECAMP: To the best of my knowledge it's on a computer, and what the specifics of how they have access to that I'm not exactly sure. But...

SENATOR CHAMBERS: But what I'm saying, if the Attorney General made a request for the information, the Secretary of State, without leaving his office, could obtain that information and give it to the Attorney General.
